from any ordinary congregation, unless one is given to eraniological observations, and even then it may be questioned whether a corresponding number of individuals taken indiscriminately from the nearest parish church would not present as many peculiarities in the way of skulls as are to be found here. To the experienced eye of the physician, however, there are one or two significant facts which escape the ordinary observer. Attention, for in stance, ie called to a young lady, with a singularly sweet and flexible voice, and when we rise to sing again we are: prepared to liston to her. The chant, however, proves to be "O be joyful in the Lord all ye lande," and the poor girl stands meek and downcust. She has, she is convinced, committed the "unpardonable sin," and can sing only in a minor key. and she cannot be joyful. Throughout the service she takes part in nothing is characterised by gladness or hope. The influence of religious dogmutical teaching upon the insane has to be very carefully watched. Even Bible reading has to be permitted only with great caution, or practical results of a rather startling character are likely to ensue. A lad at Bethlem, for in stance, conceived the idea that his right eye had offended him, and acting literally on the New Testament injunction, he "placked it out. Of course it must be understood that the who attend Divine service on Sundays are those who are somewhat advanced towards recovery. or whose maindies are of such a nature as to to permit this to be done with safety. When considered expedient, patients are encouraged to attend, but are under no compulsion to do so. It occasionally happens that one who might otherwise very well be allowed to be present in church is necessarily excluded on account o some little peculiarity which the course of the service is calculated to call forth. A more than usually curious instance of this occurred some

The great aim of experienced preschura to the insure appea to be to present the sunny side of every truth and to infuse as much as possible of cheerfulness into their religion. The wisdom of this appears to be evident from the fact the greater part of lunscy has its origin in some form of mental worry and distress. This, at least, was the case with just about balf of those within Bethlem last year the origin of whose malady could be traced. Mental anxiety, mental strain, pecuniary embarrassment, and trouble and disappointment of some kinds, appeared to be the source of mischief in about half the cases in which it could be traved to its cause, and no doubt the cause was similar in many cases in which it was not apparent; or

THE ESCAPE OF BAZAINE (Daily News, August 12th.) The escape of Marshal Bazaine from his is land prison of Ste. Marguórita furnishes Paris with a sensation of the first-class, and places Marshal MacMahon in a position of some diffioulty. On Sunday evening Bazaine was in his latyles. place, but on Monday-merning a very suspicious-looking rope, seen dangling from the ter- STRAW HATS. race on which he had been accustomed to walk. COLLARS, in attracted the notice of his keepers, and on repairing to the prison they found it empty. Afto have put his custodians on their guard were readily remembered. A small vessel had been seen cruising in the offing at Ste. Marguerite on Sunday evening, and in this, there can little doubt, Bazaine succorded in getting Colonel Vilette, the confidential who shared his captivity, had also escaped, but he has since been captured The Journal Official, in announcing that a strict inquiry will be made, adds that such acts as scilitating the escape of State prisoners cannot be tolerated, or be allowed to remain unpunish. ed. The statement was not unnecessary, and is. made in such a way as to suggest that there were doubts on the subject to be cleared away. seems difficult for French officials to keep a State prisoner. Louis Napoleon evaded his gaolers, and quite recently M. Rochefort escaped from New Caledonia. It can hardly be alleged that the French Government was not warned of the probability that Bazaine might attempt to gain his liberty in an irregular manner. It is only a few days since Madame Bazaine hadan interview with Marshal MacMahon for the purpose of soliciting the commutation of her husband's sentence to perpetual banishment, and the Marshal himself had written to friends that he desired to spend the remainder of his days in Italy. We ! may be sure that there are those who will be ready to connect Marshal MacMahon with this untoward occurrence, and it will be said that he DAMASKS. &c. could not have been unxious to secure the due execution of the sentence on his former comrade. As well might it be argued that he connived at the escape of Rochefort, or that Louis Philippe somebody who could have prevented this escape intentionally omitted to do so is, only too proliberty which would not otherwise have been

feet." would be sure to call forth. "And serve him right too!" uttered aloud with the heartiest terrupt the service, which proceeds throughout did not care to detain Louis Napoleon. That accorded to him by pledging his word of honour that he would not abuse it. Except as it the escape is not likely to have political conand the army would gladly forget him. While awaiting or undergoing his trial he was anxious to obtain his liberty, and to go to Spain. where he imagined, probably without founds. tion, that he would be serviceable to the cause of the son of his friend, Queen Isabella. If it is true that the vessel which took Bazaine away was the one in which his wife arrived to visit him on Sunday, he is not to he congratulated. The rigours of his imprisonment were mitigated. with express reference to Madame Bazaine's convenience, and she is understood to have expressed her gratitude to the Government for the concessions made to her, and to have pledged horself to comply with all the regulations of the place. The Bonapartist cause cannot be said to be strengthened either in France or elsewhere by this occurrence. Honourably restored to liberty by a favourable turn of events. Buzaine might no doubt have reasonably hoped to have a part reserved for him in the affairs of his country, but his escape from Ste. Marguerite has too.

THREE ANGELS. They say this life is barron, drear, and cold, Ever the same and song was sung of old, Ever the same long weary tale is told, And to our lips is held the cup of strife; And yet-a little love can sweeten life. They say our hands may grasp but joys destroyed, Youth has but dreams, and age an aching roid. Which Dead-Sea fruit long, long ago has cloyed, Whose night with wild tempestuous storms is rife; And yet—a little hope oun brighten life.

They say we fling ourselves in wild despair Amidat the broken tressures scattered there Where all is wrecked, where all once promised fai And stab ourselves with sorrow's two-edged knife And yet-a little patience strengthene life. le if then true, this tale of bitter grief, Of mortal anguish finding no relief? CATCHING A WEASEL ASLEEP. Natural History next to White's "Selborne") mentions how a stoat, surprised in covert, will turn round to look at a man with apparently as much boldness as a lion ortiger; hardly stirring to get out of the way. In the New Forest the present writer had an opportunity of witnessing similar fearlessness in weasels. About eight or ten of them, half-grown, with one of the old ones, kept in my sight as I stood under a tree for four or five minutes together, either playing or hunting in company within a yard or two of me, giving their curious little half dog-like barks, and every now and then stopping to look up at me. Yet the weasel is easier tamed, and well repays the trouble of taming him. Perhaps no small animal is so gentle and affectionate as a weasel. A young one, sold to me by a village boy for a penny, and roared very easily on bread and milk, would go to sleep inside my sleeve or pocket, evidently liking the warmth, and he would wake up when candle-light time came, Bowles never saw Irving again .- Cornhill galloping round and round the room, and over the chairs and sofas, with little inarticulate sounds of pleasure.
